Negro Baseball Aces to Play Here

Many picturesque Negro stars will appear for the inspection of the fans at Ebbets Field Sunday, when the Homestead Grays take on the Newark Eagles in a double-header between two of the crack teams in the National Negro League. The race is nearing a climax with the Grays booming along in first place and the Eagles third.

Leon Day, who shares with Satchel Paige the distinction of being the best of the Negro pitchers; John Gibson, backstop of the Grays, who has had reams of copy written about him; illie ells, who rates with the best shortstops of the game and is the Eagles' playing manager, and Jimmy Hill, his southpaw teammate. Hill got his start when he was 16 years old pitching in batting practice to the Detroit Tigers at their Lakeland, Florida, camp, and is now just turned 22. Sammy Bankhead, outfielder of the Grays, is the best of the colored ball hawks.

DOD AND CUN

Paul Waner Seventh

Last June 19, when Paul of the Boston Braves connected for the 3,000th hit of his 17-year major league career it brought to seven the number of 3,000 hitters in big league history.

The list includes Big Poison, Ty Cobb, Hans Wagner, Napoleon Lajoie, Eddie Collins, Tris Speaker and Adrian Cap Anson.

Ott hopes to join that membership and he may make it if he can play regularly for three years more.

During the past 13 seasons Ott has been playing regularly and averaging more than 150 bingles per season.

Pound for pound, Ott is the hardest hitter in baseball. He doesn't weigh 160 pounds, having lost some weight since taking on the manager's job this season. And when he started at the age of 16 in 1925 he nipped the scales for 155, the youngest and the smallest rookie ever signed by the Giants. He struck out in his first trip to the plate in the majors but since then has done plenty of everything—including hitting.
